For example, 39 percent of millennial grads purchased a hardcover book and 7 percent purchased an audiobook over the last 12 months. Further data shows millennial grads are 10 percent more likely than the average U.S. household to purchase a hardcover book. Interestingly, 48 percent recently shopped at Home Depot® and 13 percent expect to buy their first home in the next year. In addition, millennial grads are 2 times more likely than the average U.S. household to purchase a first home over the next 12 months.

Intriguingly, 64 percent of millennial graduates shopped at Target® in the last 3 months and 15 percent selected Patron® as their tequila brand of choice. Neustar’s non-intuitive insights about millennial graduates provide marketers with opportunities to cross-sell their products and optimize their advertising messages to resonate with this enigma generation.

“By 2017, Millennials are estimated to have more buying power than any other generation. They are a fiercely brand loyal generation and expect consistent and instant cross-channel and cross-platform experiences,” said Lisa Joy Rosner, CMO, Neustar. “As marketers, we look to this generation to inspire and shape our strategy and challenge how we interact, and delight these consumers,” she adds.

As brands go beyond assumptions about their target audience and begin to embrace varying consumer behaviors, they are able to build more relevant conversations with their customers and prospects.
